THE PROGRAM—Much Jokin', Few Speakin', Much Laughin', Some Eatin'.

THE FOREST AVENUE PARENT-TEACHER ASSOCIATION.

Yesterday afternoon the Forest Avenue Parent-Teacher Association convened, with Mrs. Dr. W. H. Taulbee in the chair, Mrs. Chenault, the President, being absent on account of sickness.

Miss Wetzel's second grade pupils gave a spelling match. They had over three hundred words pronounced to them and the spelling was very good. Health nurse Miss Casey was on the program, but on account of sickness could not be present.

Supt. Caplinger being next on the program, spoke on "How a Mother Can Aid in Raising the Standard of Her Children in School."

He said in part: There are two fundamental ways, viz: Home help, School help. Rearing children is a very important work. Great many things wrong in school originate in the home. He said the Chief of Police in Chicago reported upon an investigation that the parents shifted the responsibility of the rearing of their children to the school, the church, the State.

The school for education, the church for religious training and the State for morality and good behavior when away from home.

The predelinquency boy is the one who is inclined that way. A superintendent who investigated 322 boys in seven schools, found these conditions: First, those boys beyond normal age, kept out by parents or otherwise, until they are too old to classify or too large to go into classes with those of the same normal attainment. Second, those from motherless homes. Third, those from fatherless homes. Fourth, those from homes of divorced parents. Fifth, mothers who were poor housekeepers. Sixth, fathers and mothers immoral. One hundred and eighty-three smoked cigarettes, gang, out late at night. He insisted on the parents seeing that the pupils study an allotted period at home. Help at school, parents have a right to know how their children are getting along in school. Teachers should be willing to tell the parent true conditions and then work out the child's welfare.

Parent should help the teacher carry out what the teacher wants accomplished, and the teacher should help the parent carry out what the parent wants accomplished.

ABOUT BILLY SUNDAY'S METHOD.

This talk about "Billy" Sunday at Lexington reminds us about the time our Lord sat with publican and sinners. Some very righteous church members came to see the disciples about the affair. The Lord took care of the situation and we believe the Rev. "Billy" can do the same. One of the chief attractions about "Billy" is that he talks to the unlearned and the common people can understand him. More words of one syllable in our pulpits today could catch the people. "Billy" can handle the situation.

GEISEL & CONRAD

SYNOPSIS.

Francis Beaupre, a peasant babe of three years, after an amusing incident in which Marshall New figures, is made a Chevalier of France by the Emperor Napoleon, who prophesies that the child might one day be a marshal of France under another Bonaparte. The age of ten Francis visits General Baron Gaspard Gourgaud, who with Allice, his seven-year-old daughter, lives at Chateau. A soldier of the Empire under Napoleon he fires the boy's imagination with stories of his campaigns. The general offers Francis a home at the Chateau. The boy refuses to leave his parents, but in the end becomes a captive for the general and learns of the friendship between the general and Marquis Zappi, who campaigned with the general under Napoleon. Marquis Zappi and his son, Pietro, arrive at the Chateau. The general agrees to care for the Marquis's son while the former goes to America. The Marquis before leaving for America asked Francis to be a friend of his son. The boy solemnly promises. Francis goes to the Chateau to live. Marquis Zappi dies leaving Pietro as a ward of the general. Allice, Pietro and Francis meet a strange boy who proves to be Prince Louis Napoleon. Francis saves his life. The general discovers Francis loves Allice, and contracts a promise from him that he will not interfere between the girl and Pietro. Francis goes to the general's secretary to Pietro. Queen Louise plans the escape of her son Louis Napoleon by disguising him and Marquis Zappi as her lackey. Francis takes Marquis Zappi's place, who is ill, in the escape of Hortense and Louis. Francis lures the Austrians from the hotel allowing the prince and his mother to escape. Francis is a prisoner of the Austrians for five years in the castle owned by Pietro in Italy. He discovers in his guard one of Pietro's old family servants, and through him sends word to his friends of his plight. The general, Allice and Pietro hear from Francis and plan his rescue. Francis as a guest of the Austrian governor of the castle prison inspects the interior of the wine cellar of the Zappis. Francis receives a note from Pietro explaining in detail how to escape from his prison. Allice awaits him on horseback and leads him to his friends on board the American sailing vessel, the "Lovely Lucy."

CHAPTER XIX.

The Sacrifice.
Young Henry Hampton, thrilled to the core at this drama, bent over him, as Battista laid him on the deck, and looked up anxiously at Pietro.
"Is he living?" he asked.
He was lying, though for an hour or two the devoted friends who cared for him doubted if they had not got him back only to lose him. But that last effort of the change to the ship being past, when consciousness came again he grew strong more rapidly.
"I thought—the Austrians—would nab me—as I came aboard," he whispered, smiling gaily as he gasped the words to Allice. "It was—I am my mind."
And Allice laughed at him, and told him that they were far out on the Adriatic now, safe under the American flag, and the Austrians left two hundred miles behind.
"Even if they had—nabbed me," whispered Francis, "those two days with you would have paid."
And Allice shuddered a little and told him to go to sleep and stop thinking of Austrians, for they were out of his life now forever.
"My seigneur," said Francis next day when the general took his turn at sitting by his bed, "may I ask a question?"
"Any question in the world, Francis, my son," the general growled at him, as if the tender words were a defiance to an enemy.
Francis hesitated. "About Allice and Pietro?"
The general shook his head. "Ah, that! That I cannot tell you, Francis. Sometimes I believe that I have been mistaken, that—the general as he stopped looked oddly at Francis and smiled. "Sometimes I believe that even I, even Gaspard Gourgaud, might make a mistake in trying to play the good God, and arranging lives. That might be—yes. In any case I cannot tell."
Francis, thinking deeply, hazarded another question. "He loves her?"
"I believe so, indeed," said the general. "He cares most to be with us—"

The General Shook His Head.

with her. Ah yes, I have no doubt that he loves her. But why it goes no farther—captivity! It is beyond me—that! I would knock their foolish heads together, me—but that is not convenient."
"Does she love Pietro?"
"Mon dieu! How can a mere man say that? She is a woman. I do not know—not in the least," the general exploded at him.
"But Pietro loves her?" Francis asked again, his wistful smiling eyes searching the general's face.
"Yes—I am sure of it."
And Francis smiled.
"No one could help it," he said half to himself.
In a day more little Battista came into Francis's cabin and put clothes on him and wrapped him like a mummy in coats and rugs, and carried him in his arms up on deck, and there laid him in a hammock on the sunny side of the ship. And the salt air blew on his face and he gulped it in, and by and by Allice brought a chair and sat by him and read to him, and Francis lay quiet and wondered if heaven could be any improvement on this.

So, on that long, bright, calm morning at sea Francis lay in the hammock and watched the million little waves glisten and break for unknown miles over the sunlit water, and listened to the voice he loved best in the world, as it told him of those others whom he loved also, and of the places dear to him; and he wondered that he had indeed come through the long nightmare of prison to this happiness.
"Mr. Hampton has been talking to me about Virginia; it must be a beautiful country," said Allice. "I should love the free friendly life of those great domains. I believe I could leave France and Viqueux for such a country as that, where there are no political volcanoes on top of which one must live. With us it is always plotting and secrecy. Always a way to look back on or to look forward to. I should like to go to Virginia."
"But," said Francis, with his great eyes glowing, "the way one now looks forward to in France will be short and glorious. And after that will be peace. For there will be a Bonaparte ruling, and that means strength and good government."

"How you believe in the great captain and in his blood," and Allice smiled down at the pale face on fire with its lifelong enthusiasm.
"One must," said Francis simply, and paused, and went on. "For money, you know, Allice, how it is. How the star of the Bonapartes has always seemed to be my star! I believe that I believe that my life is tied to that house. Napoleon was more than human to my mind, his touch set me aside for his uses in my cradle."

"And made you a chevalier," Allice considered. "That was a true accolade, Francis. You would have a right to that title under another Bonaparte."

"I believe so, Allice."
"And my father believes it. So you must hurry and get well and come back to France and be fit for work when the prince needs you, Chevalier Beaupre. My father has told you that a movement is preparing? He is reckless, my father, and it troubles me. It might be unsafe for him to live in France if he part in these plots were known."

"Then you could come to Virginia—to Carnifax," and Francis smiled.
But Allice flushed. "That is Pietro's estate, not ours," she said quickly; and then she rose and bent over the sick boy. "I must go to my father now," she said, and caught his pitiful hands suddenly in both hers. "But oh! Francis, I wish I could tell you how it changes all the world to have you back again!" and she was gone.
Francis, trembling with a rapture he could not quiet, lay, not stirring, because he feared to break the spell of the touch of her hands; feeling within him a rebel hope that yet he would not let take hold of him. Could it be? Was it true? Did she care for him and not Pietro? Was that the reason that in all these years she and Pietro were still only sister and brother? Yet, he caught and choked the thought. Even then he had no right, he could not, would not tell her what she was to him. He would be Pietro's friend always as he had promised long ago; more, a thousand times more now, when Pietro had given back to him freedom and life and hope.

CHAPTER XX.

A Social Crisis.

On a day the ship sailed into a splendid roadstead, big enough to hold the ships of half the world. Then into a wide, flashing river, the James river, four or five miles wide down there at its mouth. And up and up and up the bright river, the narrowing river, between the low green banks, with now and again a glimpse of a large house and of gardens and lawns green with June, as one sailed past.
Henry Hampton told Francis who lived in them as they went by—Harrisons and Carters and Byrds and Randolphs—strange-sounding, difficult, English names in the ear of the Frenchman. Young Mr. Hampton knew them all, it seemed; many of them were his cousins; Francis listened, surprised, interested, to the word picture which the Virginian unconsciously drew, as he talked of every-day happenings, of a society and a way of living different from any the Frenchman had ever heard of.

With that they were in sight of Roanoke house—one might see the roofs of the buildings over the trees—Henry Hampton pointed it out with a touch of excitement in his grave manner. Then, as one slipped along the sparkling water, there was a sharp head in the stream, and as they turned the large silvery green slope of the law lay before them, with its long wharf and barges lying at the water-side, and a ship unloading its return cargo from England.

"It is the Sea Lady," called young Hampton. "She is in before us—and she sailed so long after."

He made a quick movement forward with his pathetic broken step—for this only son of the Hampton family was a cripple.

There were people gathering on the lawn, negroes drawn up in line; the women in bright-colored turbans, men and women both showing white teeth as they grinned with the pleasure and the excitement of watching the ship come in. Then a white light figure ran down the broad green lawn, and a girl stood, golden curls on her shoulders, a straw hat with blue ribbons tying down some of the golden curls, but not all—stood and watched and waved an eager friendly hand.

"It is my cousin Lucy," Harry Hampton said, and Francis, looking at him, saw his eyes fixed on her intently in a few minutes more, leaving the ship with his halting careful step. Francis saw him kiss her cousin—yet it seemed not altogether coolly—and with that he was saying a word about "My new friend, the Chevalier Beaupre," and the girl's quick hand-clasp and the warm welcome in her voice of honey, made Francis feel as if a place in her friendship had been waiting for him always.

Then, from back of her, from somewhere, towered suddenly a tall man, with large features, and first seized Harry Hampton's hand and then turned to the stranger with the same air of entire pleasure and hospitality.

"My nephew's friend is welcome at Roanoke house," he said, and Francis, with his few words of English, understood enough to be warmed to the soul at his first contact with southern hospitality.

"It is my uncle, Colonel Hampton," Harry's voice was explaining. They would not hear of his going to Carnifax—not for days, not for a month; why should he go at all?—Colonel Hampton asked. If he were to be a year or two in Virginia, he would be set up housekeeping alone in that big house, when Roanoke house was here and in order, and only too glad to keep him. So Francis for a week or two stayed. And found himself, shortly, a notability. Harry Hampton, his boyish ambition for adventure and daring denied every personal outlet, because of that accident in babyhood which had started him in life hopelessly lame, was as proud of his salvage from the Austrian herd of prey as if Francis's record had been his own. Much more frankly proud, he could talk about it, and did. Allice had told him a great deal, and the episode of the handless rescue of Prince Louis Napoleon, the capture and imprisonment and final theatrical escape, went like wild-fire about the countryside, and stirred all the romance of the warm-blooded southerners. Every house wanted the hero to break bread, and under young Harry's proud wing Francis went gladly to meet all these friends of his friend. As the general had said years ago, his simplicity struck the finest note of sophisticated high breeding; moreover, he had lived with high-bred people in more than one country; the aristocrats of Virginia were delighted with his young soldierly manner and his stirring history, with the lines of suffering still in his thin face and the broad lock of gray—the badge of that suffering—in his dark hair; with the quaint foreign accent too, and the unexpectedness in the turns of his rapidly increasing English.

And now he had left Roanoke, and was living in the great old house on Pietro's land, the old house which had been lived in a hundred years before Pietro's father had bought it, the old house in which grandchildren of Pietro lived today.

Something in his odd broken English, something in his vivacity and energy, something in the warmth of the heart which the poor souls felt in him—none quicker than negroes to feel a heart—fascinated the slaves who fell to his unaccustomed management. He had met Henry Clay and the proud aristocrats of Virginia as men and women, and given them the best of himself; he met these thick-lipped, dim-souled, black people no otherwise, and gave them the same. By the crystal truth in him the first had been vanquished, and it happened not differently with these other human beings. Pietro's mismanaged property grew orderly month by month; Francis, in the saddle most of the time, riding from end to end of the plantation, found his hands full and his work interesting, and his health and strength coming back—though that was a slower progress.

The people who do most are likely to be the people who can do a thing more. Young Henry Hampton, ruled out of the larger part of his natural pleasures by that stern by-law of nature, which had made him lame, appeared to Francis's sympathy every day more deeply. The one thing which the lad could do was riding. "Henry," Francis spoke, as the two trotted together down a shady lane of the plantation on the way to the far fields where negroes worked in the autumn sunlight, "what would you think of organizing a mounted troop of militia?"

The boy's face flamed with excitement. What would he think of it? He would think it glorious, wonderful, half a dozen big adjectives.

There were many young men in the neighborhood; all of them rode; none of them had enough to do; Francis had a hold on them—a man may not spend five years in a dungeon because of a dashing mad act of bravery without acquiring a halo which adorns afterward; it was fairly certain that a military company, originating with the Chevalier Beaupre, would succeed. And it succeeded. Three days later it was started with the cordial sanction of the fathers and the enthusiasm of the sons. Francis was, of course, the moving spirit and the responsible head, and Francis was hard at work calling back the old lore of his school-days at Saint-Cyr and reading books on tactics and all military subjects.

"Henry," said Colonel Hampton one morning after breakfast at Roanoke house, "I want to speak to you a moment in my study."

Harry went calmly into the dim, pleasant, old room, with its paneled walls and portraits set into the paneling; he had no fear of what his uncle might say, for he was not merely the young nephew and ward living in his uncle's house—he was the owner of most of the acres which made the plantation a great one. Colonel Hampton considered that in his treatment of Harry, and Harry knew it well enough. Moreover, it was an unspoken secret that Harry or Lucy had the right of strength over weakness in dealing with the head of the house. Obstacles combined sometimes with weakness, it is true, but yet the two youngsters understood clearly that the colonel was the head only by a graceful fiction. So young Henry Hampton felt no alarm at the quality of his uncle's tone. The colonel sat down in the highest chair, a chair throne-like in its dignity; he faced the lad and pulled importantly at the end of his mustache.

"This troop of cavalry about organized," he demanded.

"Well, that's rather a big name for it, Uncle Henry, but it is going like a strong," answered Henry, junior. "We meet again today, and tomorrow I think we shall begin business."

"I approve of it," Colonel Hampton stated.

Harry bowed his head gravely. The colonel went on.

"It is a well-bred and appropriate method of amusement. A gentleman should know something of military affairs." But—ah—the raking and—ah—arrangements? Such—details are not unlikely with gentlemen of the first families, as you all are—except one—to crystallize into a later importance. The man who has been the leader of this company of very young men will not unlikely be the man thought of as a leader in—ah—affairs of greater moment to come. May I inquire who is the captain?"

Henry Hampton looked troubled, impatient.

"Why, nobody yet, Uncle Henry. We have not got to that. But, of course, the Chevalier—"

Colonel Hampton interrupted him. "Exactly. I thought so. That is what I wish to avoid. The Chevalier must not be the captain."

"The boy caught up the words hotly. "Uncle Henry, he has done it all. We all want him."

"Exactly. But you must not have him. I am surprised at you, Henry! Do you remember that this man is peasant-born? Do you want to be led into battle by a person whose rank is not above that of our own servants?"

"Led into battle!" Young Henry laughed shortly. "Led into a corn field is more like it." And then his glance fixed. "Moreover, Uncle Henry, if there were battle in the case, we should all count ourselves lucky to be led by—hero."

"A hero!" Colonel Hampton sniffed. "A mere French peasant by his own account. Of course, I have—received him, because of your infatuation for him. And—the young man has qualities. He has been a success socially. I will not deny. I am quite surprised by his success. But when it comes to putting him in a position above men of birth, my blood revolts. I request you, Henry, to use your influence against this. I can not endure to have him give you commands. You should be the captain, because your social position has made the enterprise possible. But, yet, if—your misfortune—if some other seems more fit—A painful color darkened the boy's face and his brows gathered. The colonel went on. "I should make no objection to that. But, Henry, he put the pillars of his mustache with solemnity—"I must request you to use your influence absolutely to prevent this parvenu from being placed over you."

Harry Hampton put his hand on the table beside him and lifting himself with that aid stood before his uncle, leaning a little on the table as his lame foot made it necessary, but yet a figure full of decision and dignity.

"And I must refuse absolutely, Uncle Henry, to do anything of the kind. I am not in question. As you say, I have a misfortune. I shall use what influence I have to see that the Chevalier Beaupre is made captain of the company he has organized and is to educate. This is fitting. I am proud to call him my friend, and I am glad that I can be large-minded enough to realize that as large a mind as his is not to be measured by petty standards. If he is a prince or if he is a peasant is quite immaterial, because he is first a very great thing—himself." He turned from the astonished colonel, and with his halting step was gone.

Shortly the young master's horse was ordered and he had left word with Ebenezer, the butler, as he went out, that he would not be home till bedtime, and was off toward Carnifax.

"Francis," he began, finding his friend busy over his papers in that same library, at that same carved mahogany desk, where today lie the packages of old letters—"Francis, I want to speak to you—about something—before our meeting."

"What then? The boy is out of breath. You have been running Black Hawk again, my Henry—that horse will complain of you soon, the strong beast. What is it you are so such a hurry to take one must race across country so of a good hour of the morning?"

But Henry was too intent to talk nothing. "It is important," he said briefly. "We must have a captain for the company at once, and it must be you."

"Sacre de bois!" smiled Francis radiantly. "The good idea! I can not imagine a fellow more beautiful to be a captain than I. Can you?"

But Henry was altogether serious-minded. "You will consent then?" he threw at him. "I did not think of it till this morning, but I see it should be done at once. We shall all want you, of course, and want nobody else."

Now Henry Hampton, not having thought of the question till this morning, had no right to make this statement in a full round voice of certainty. Yet he knew every man in the company, and he felt in himself the force to answer for them. He answered for them without a hesitation. And with that Francis's laughing face grew grave. He pushed the letters from him and got up and came across to the boy and bent and put his arm around his shoulder as he sat still and stiff.

"These French ways of his friend pleased Henry immensely, but they also petrified him with embarrassment. Francis was not in the least embarrassed. He patted the broad young shoulder affectionately.

"My good Henry," he said gently. "What a loyal heart—and what a reckless one! How then can you answer for all those messieurs?"

Henry flung up his head and began. "They will—if they do not I shall make them"—but Francis stopped the bold words.

"No," he said quietly—yet with a tone of finality which the other recognized. "That will not be necessary. And the messieurs are my good friends; they will treat me with honor; they will be better to me than I deserve. I know that well." There were so few people in the world who did not, to Francis, seem his good friends. "But, my Henry, I will not be the captain. I have thought of that, if you have not. Look here."

He swung to the desk and slipped out a drawer, and had a long folded paper in his hands. He flapped it open before Harry's eyes. It was a formal notice to Mr. Henry Hampton, junior, that the Jefferson troop of Virginia had elected him as its captain.

Harry flushed violently and his mouth quivered with pleasure, with nervousness, with unhappiness. The other watched him eagerly. All this affair of the troop he had done to give pleasure to Harry Hampton, his friend. It was the only way in which the lame boy could be on equal terms with the other boys, and Francis had determined from the first that every joy which could be gleaned out of it he should have. To be the captain ought to be a joy.

"I!" Harry cried and then was silent—and then spoke sorrowfully. "But—it can not be!"

"Can not be?" demanded Francis. "Why not?"

There was a moment's silence and with a painful effort the words came. "My—misfortune. I am lame."

And Francis cried out, "Henry—all that is nonsense! What of it? It is a thing you do as well as the best—riding. Who has such a seat, such lands as you? Why not then, I demand. And went on. "It is settled. I have talked to them all—see the signatures. You are the captain, my Henry—and I am your right hand and your left hand—yes and your feet, too, whenever you need me."

"But," said Harry, dazed. "It is really your place; don't you want to be captain?" he shot at the other boyishly.

And with that Francis's arm was about his shoulder again as the two stood together, and Francis was laughing.

He laughed. "But yes," he said. "I should like it. That is a secret." His face was brilliant with laughter. "You only may know, my Henry, that I am vain—ah, very vain," he repeated sadly. "Never tell it! I love titles and honors and importance. I like to be called Chevalier—though indeed that is my right," he added with a quick touch of dignity. "And I should like very much to be captain of this company of the young men, the flowers—does one say?—of the South. But it is not best." He held up his forefinger and looked enormously worldly-wise.

"No. You would not mind; the young messieurs would not mind, perhaps—but the fathers—ah, the fathers!" He threw back his head and gazed at the ceiling with eyes of horror. Then with a start and a band flung out, "Aud the mothers! Mon Dieu! But the mothers, Henry! They would make—what you call it—a h—l of a time, is it not?"

Then with a start and a band flung out, "Aud the mothers! Mon Dieu! But the mothers, Henry! They would make—what you call it—a h—l of a time, is it not?"

He Flapped It Open Before Harry's Eyes.

Harry roared with joy at the terrified whisper. "But I have neither father nor mother," he suggested.

"Ah, Henry," argued Francis with deep satisfaction in his tone, "that makes you so suitable."

"Suitable!" inquired Henry. "But yes, my friend. It kills jealousy. All is grist, one says, that comes to your mill. All is fathers, all is mothers to the poor orphan—and besides that, there is Monsieur the Colonel. One sees that the uncle of the captain will be contented. And whom should I wish to content but my first host, my first benefactor in this land? I believe, indeed, he would be displeased if I should take the place I believe he is not satisfied of my birth."

And beneath the nonsense of Francis, Henry could not but acknowledge the clear-sighted logic. So it happened that Henry Hampton became captain of the Jefferson Troop, to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

Exterminated Like the Buffalo.

Some idea of the vast numbers of animals that Africa used to support can be gained from a passage in W. S. Scully's reminiscences. It was Mr. Scully's good fortune in 1892 to witness the last great trek of spring bucks from east to west of the Bushman desert—a trek on a scale such as no man will ever see again. Fencing, the increase of population and the distribution of arms have almost exterminated the once innumerable host. He says: "I have stood on an eminence some twenty feet high, far out on the plains, and seen the absolutely level surface, as wide as the eye could reach, covered with resting springbucks, while from over the eastern horizon the rising columns of dust told of fresh hosts advancing."

lag a raconteur and does it awfully well. He likes his friends to correct him if he repeats himself. It would be a blessing if other story tellers did likewise.

The gardens of Skibo are looking gorgeous just now, especially the old English garden which is a mass of flowers, with fruit trees around the walls, and cabbages to give it the true air of a century ago! The walls, like those of all self-respecting English gardens, are mellow red brick.

Everybody knows there are no rabbits in the world like those of Scotland. When one appears in the sky at Skibo a bell rings and all the house party fly to the lawn to admire it!

School Boys Badly Used.

Early in the last century many boys at Eton, England, had to undergo a rough training. An old Etonian who left the school in 1831 describes his experiences there as "worse than that of many inmates of a workhouse or gaol. To get up at five on freezing winter mornings; to sweep their own floors and make their own beds; to go two-by-two to the pump for a scanty wash; to eat no mouthful of food until 9 a. m.; to live on an endless round of mutton, potatoes and leeks, none of them too plentiful or too good; to sleep in a dismal cold room out chair or table. Such was the lot of boys whose parents could not afford to pay for a private room. Some of these underwent privations that might have broken down a cabin boy, and would be thought inhuman if inflicted on a galley slave."

DRUG HOUSE ENJOINED BY FEDERAL COURT

Judge Jeremiah Netter, of the United States district court, to-day granted a permanent injunction in behalf of the Centaur Company of New York, the manufacturers of Fletcher's Castor Oil, against the Stewart & Holmes Drug Company of this city.

The controversy arose from the simulating of the labels of this well-known preparation, and from the evidence filed in the case it was shown that the infringing label was first discovered on sale in Honolulu, and was traced to its origin here in Seattle.

The defendant company is one of the oldest and largest concerns of its kind in the Northwest.

The decree carries with it an order that the Stewart & Holmes Company recall the goods which are on the market under the infringing label, and to pay all costs in the suit and damages assessed at $400.—Seattle, Wash., "Times."—Adv.

Magnificent Crops in all Western Canada
All parts of the Provinces of British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have produced wonderful yields of Wheat, Oats, Barley and Flax. Wheat graded from Contract No. 1 Hard, weighed heavy and yielded from 20 to 45 bushels per acre; 22 bushels was about the total average. Many farmers may be considered fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses and rich soil of the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. In 1912, and again in 1913, the Government carried out the Championship for beef steer. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent. That learned London doctor who remarked that "Half the divorces in civilized countries are due to corsets," must have forgotten about "affinities."

President Wilson might try sending "General" Kelly's vagabond army to thrash Mexico. If it couldn't thrash it, maybe the hungry hoboes might eat it.

Every now and then the State Treasurer of Kentucky jolies things along by publishing a report of the condition of the Treasury. As it is always bad, what's the use?

Things have gone far enough at Washington to prove the claim that William Jennings Bryan was and is a failure as a constructive statesman. As a Presidential possibility he was an empty theorist, and now as Secretary of State he has been a flat failure. We shall hardly hear anything further about Bryan for President.

DEBATE IS CLOSED.

Why is it a man will willingly wait a half hour for a girl to get ready for a show before they are married and then fuss because the breakfast is ten minutes late after they are married?—Macon Telegraph.

We know the answer to this question but have lost too many arguments with the missus already to walk right back into the middle of another one.—Lexington Herald.

GRANDMA TILLMAN MAKES A KICK.

At Washington Senator Tillman's long-pending resolution forbidding smoking during executive sessions was adopted by the Senate by unanimous vote.

"I am beset with the danger of being driven out of the party and of the Senate itself," said Senator Tillman in a speech supporting his resolution, "for my very life depends on pure air."

He never said a word about "pure language."

THE PEACE THAT PASSETH UNDERSTANDING.

Let us learn to be content with what we have. Let us get rid of our false estimates, set up all the higher ideals—a quiet home; vines of our own planting; a few books full of the inspiration of genius; a few friends worthy of being loved and able to love us in turn; a hundred innocent pleasures that bring no pain or sorrow; a devotion to the right that will never swerve; a simple religion empty of all bigotry, full of trust and hope and love—and to such a philosophy this world will give up all the empty joy it has.—The Chariot.

What is a political platform, anyway? asks an exchange. A political platform is like a railroad platform. It's used to get on the train. After you get on, you forget the platform, and enjoy the ride.

A GOOD THING—PUSH IT ALONG.

When a lady at Norfolk, Va., wrote to the Lexington postmaster stating that she would like to secure a husband in this neck of the woods because she had a hankering to live in Kentucky, she may not have known that it pays to advertise. She does now, however, or will soon. The Leader has had at least twenty-five requests from men in the city and county asking that her real name and address be given, so they could write to her, and give her the opportunity she craves of coming to Kentucky. In each case, the name and address have been cheerfully furnished, for The Leader believes in helping Daniel Cupid, Esq., or any other laudable movement.—Lexington Leader.

MR. BRYAN, STATESMAN (?)

A Secretary of State cannot methodically and continuously neglect the high duties of his office without a day of reckoning, and Mr. Bryan's day of reckoning is full twenty-four hours long.

With the retirement of John Bassett Moore from the State Department, it is apparent that public confidence in the State Department has ceased to exist. Nothing saves the situation except the general belief that the President is his own Secretary of State. It is plain that if the country had to rely upon Mr. Bryan for the conduct of its foreign affairs in this critical period, there would be a general condition of panic.

Some of the harsh criticism to which Mr. Bryan has been subjected in the last thirty-six hours is undoubtedly undeserved, but the blame rests with him nevertheless. He has not taken his great office seriously. He has not performed the onerous duties of Secretary of State. He has been willing to let somebody else do the work while he traveled and lectured. He has clung to the honors and emoluments of office, but he has shirked its responsibilities until public confidence in his capacity and judgment is dwindling to nothing.

Many great men have been Secretary of State and not a few small men have been Secretary of State; but no other man, great or small, ever trifled with the first office in the Cabinet as Mr. Bryan has trifled with it.—New York World, Democratic.

HE WON THE WAGER.

"It's curious," said Brown, "how coming events cast their shadows before them. I'll wager a five hundred of you gentlemen can guess what was the last thing played on the organ at the time of the fire."

"The Lost Chord," suggested Smith.

Brown shook his head.

"Dies Irae," said the classical gentleman.

Brown shook his head again.

"What was it then?" asked the practical member. Brown got up, reached for his hat, and went to the door. Then he replied:

"The hose!"

JOHN BUNNY INSURES HIS FACE AGAINST BEAUTY.

Fifty thousand dollars is the value of a thoroughly ugly face, or so thinks Mr. John Bunny, the motion picture man. He will receive that amount of insurance money if some mishap should make him handsome.

Recently Mr. Bunny met Mr. Hugo Leidenroth, manager for an insurance company. "You're getting better looking," remarked Mr. Leidenroth.

"Heaven forbid," returned the actor. "If that ever happens I'll lose my meal ticket."

Mr. Leidenroth suggested insurance against such a calamity.

"Never thought of that, but I'll take you up," was the reply. "What will a policy for $50,000 against fatal beauty or accident to my face cost?"

"The deal was made and a policy mailed to Mr. Bunny."

GARLIC TAINTS THE MILK.
(Augusta Chronicle.)
One of the most successful farmers in Bracken County asks the Chronicle to publish the following, hoping that it will prove of benefit to others:
This man had his farm almost cleared of garlic, and some time ago purchased some alfalfa hay from Cincinnati dealers to feed his stock. Naturally the manure was scattered over the place, the prospects at this time are that his farm will be covered with garlic. He says when the cattle eats the garlic it makes both milk and butter unfit for use, as well as beef. He thinks a law should be passed prohibiting a farmer selling hay in which garlic is mixed.

WOULD RAISE QUARANTINE ON KENTUCKY CATTLE.
Frankfort.—While the Kentucky House was passing a bill providing for a county veterinarian to inspect dairy herds the State Board of Health was in session considering means for raising the quarantine on Kentucky cattle imposed by the State of Illinois. The board's plan is to appoint assistant State veterinarians in each county to inspect free of charge every herd of thoroughbred stock, either dairy or beef cattle. The Government will furnish the antitoxin. The question with the board was whether it has authority to require the inspection of all the cattle shipped out of the State, or whether it must depend on the regulations of other States. The board held a conference with Assistant Attorney General Hoggan about it.
If all the beef cattle is inspected by the State authorities in compliance with the regulations of the Bureau of Animal Industry, States to the north will receive Kentucky cattle. As it is the cattle is quarantined for tuberculosis, and the cattle industry is said to rank third, after tobacco and whisky in this State.

THE GREATEST KIDNEY

a Grateful Woman
I want to tell you how much good your Swamp-Root did me. About four years ago, I suffered from what the doctors called fistula and for two years
of that time, I endured what no tongue can tell. I also had inflammation of the bladder and I tried doctors' medicines without receiving any help. Someone told me about Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.
After giving it a thorough trial, I received relief, so kept on using it and today I am a strong and well woman. If
I ever feel badly or out of sorts, I take Swamp-Root and it always straightens me out. I honestly believe that this medicine would cure all troubles you recommend it for and it is a pleasure
for me to send my testimony and photograph to you. I think Dr. Kilmer's
Swamp-Root is one of the greatest medicines on earth.

THE GREAT KIDNEY Remedy on Ear h," Says
a Grateful Woman
I want to tell you how much good
your Swamp-Root did me. About four years ago, I suffered from what the
doctors called fistula and for two years
of that time, I endured what no tongue
can tell. I also had inflammation of
the bladder and I tried doctors' medicines without receiving any help. Someone told me about Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-
Root.
After giving it a thorough trial, I received relief, so kept on using it and
today I am a strong and well woman. If
I ever feel badly or out of sorts, I take Swamp-Root and it always straightens
me out. I honestly believe that this medicine would cure all troubles you
recommend it for and it is a pleasure
for me to send my testimony and photograph to you. I think Dr. Kilmer's
Swamp-Root is one of the greatest medicines on earth.
Respectfully yours,

"THE SOUL'S HABITATION"

Last Night's Eloquent Sermon By Rev. G. W. Bunton—M. E. Church Revival Groves In Interest.

Rev. G. W. Bunton, D. D., preached Thursday night to a large audience upon the theme, "The Soul's Habitation," from the text, Psalm 71:3. In part the preacher said, "There are some unanswerable questions that are ever rising about the soul of man and the great facts of God. We are ever embarrassed at our inability to meet these great questions. The powers of the soul, the abilities of human nature, also the limits of human genius give work for the psychologist. The who, the why, the where, and the when, of God furnish unending tasks for the moral scientists and theologian. But all men are not philosophers, psychologists and theologians; most of us are just common men and women, but with that we are just a little lower than angels." But an indolent mind and a lazy heart can never know much of the great discoverable facts of nature and revelation. While we may never be able to learn the differences and modifications of the human soul, and the mysteries of God; and may never with accuracy tell the contents of the soul and will never "by searching find out God," yet every conscious mind is aware that the soul of man is constantly feeling after God. So that David prayed a brief prayer, "O, Lord be thou my strong habitation to which I may continually resort." In that prayer brief, extensive, personal, intense, two facts are implied—First, the sense of the soul's need; second, God's ability to supply that need.

Next to the term "mother" and appellations of the Diet is one other word persuasive and musical, that term is "Home." How essential the home is to society, civilization, religion, personal good and safety. Every man is emperor in the empire of his own home; in that he holds the power of life and death. If a man's body needs housing, how much more does his soul need safeguarding.

The soul must have a habitation. The soul may be a homeless wanderer. With-out a spiritual hiding place the soul is as a waif upon the trackless bosom of the abyss, lonesome, tired and home sick. So vast is the realm over which the mind and spirit of man are compelled to stroll that they cannot keep true to their compass-points unless they have a habitation, a home, to which they may constantly look and turn.

The soul needs protection. It must have a protector against the searching sins that ruin. Home is the refuge for the body; David's habitation is "a hiding place for the pursued soul." God; man came out from God, cannot be satisfied only as he enjoys the fellowship of his Maker. With a sense of God's almightiness at the disposal of man's soul he can smile at storms, laugh at the tempter, mock the avenger, rejoice over his foes, and after awhile conquer death!

Security alone is insufficient for the soul. The soul must also have comfort. The home is the place for physical comfort. The tired man or woman in the home can sit down in chair and read, rest, recreate, and recline at will; wonder the world has learned to slug, "There's no place like home." Think of the homeless! No fires, no shelter, might come on and no bed for the head; men, women and children wearing wearily they know not whither. Friendless, homeless. What a frig world is this if no fireside of comfort. But soul of mine, how sad thy plight of a wanderer upon the deep of life, beating thy weary pinions on the trackless waste of the sea of life, comfortless, weary, tired and dying!

What a chance this text offers to a man tired of sin. Shot through with the arrows drawn from the quivers of vice and sorrow and shame. It was the song of the tempest-tossed: "O, come angel band; Come, and around me stand; O bear me away on your snowy wings To my immortal home!"

But is there any hope commensurate with the soul's need? Yes, the second implication, God's ability. He can secure the soul; he can satisfy the deep longing for present help and joy and a guarantee of future bliss. He can impart to the soul of man a spiritual gift that is profitable for the life which now is and for that which is to come. God is accessible to all who will seek Him; "If ye seek me with the whole heart, I will be found of Him." Come for all things are ready. Are you weary? Seek and ye shall find rest. Are you hesitant? Ask and ye shall receive. Are you tired without the door? Knock and it shall be opened unto you; and behind the door of grace stands Him who is able to do above all that we ask or think. For the soul, God is an accessible habitation, a secure habitation, a blessed habitation, an enduring habitation. Such infiniteness is at your disposal. Will you enter into its benefits? O man, O woman, give your soul a chance tonight! Return, O prodigal heart to your God!

STATE WIDE

Prohibition Bill Passed The House 61 to 32—Kentucky Going Some on the Water Wagon.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 12.—The State-wide amendment passed the House by a vote of 61 to 32 at noon.

It transpired on a point of order, after the vote had been clinched by a motion to reconsider and table, that the House had not adopted the substitute and had passed the original bill, which contains no referendum, and is unavailing. A motion then was made to suspend the rules and do it all over again. Under suspension of the rules the motion to reconsider and lay on the table was reconsidered and the substitute bill was passed.

The bill gives the Railroad commission the power to regulate joint rates as well as the power it now enjoys of regulating and changing all the rules, regulations, practice and service of common carriers. The commission is given authority to order any railroad to install, operate and maintain such safety devices as it may deem necessary. The bill requires common carriers to give the commission 30 days' notice of any contemplated changes of rates and fares and to file schedules showing such changes.

JOHNSON T. YELTON

One of Bracken County's Oldest Merchants and Tobacco Dealers Passes Away.

(Augusta Chronicle.) Johnson T. Yelton passed away at his home at Johnsonville on Sunday night, March 8, congestion of the lungs being the cause of his death, which was preceded by a severe bilious attack.

Mr. Yelton was a veteran of the Union army, serving his country equally as well as a soldier as a private citizen. His wife preceded him to the great beyond two or three years ago, but he is survived by three children.

Mr. Yelton always attended the old soldiers' reunions in Maysville and was well known to old veterans.

Farmers

Have you ever tried our way of borrowing money to pay for a farm?

You, of course, know that most farms are sold for one-third cash and the balance of the payment is represented by lien notes due in one and two years. You also know that there are times when it is impossible to pay these notes when they become due.

Our specialty is lending money on good farms for LONG PERIODS. Would you rather have five years to pay the balance than two years? Any one expecting to buy farms this March will do well to come in and consult us about getting the money.

We have been giving satisfactory service for 24 years.

ELECTRIC SIGNS!

The distinguishing air of quality which a first-class Electric Sign gives to a store is the element which gives a sign its greatest value as an advertising medium and investment. The impression it makes is good. It blazes forth to the public that there is business enterprise, merchandise and methods up-to-date. It affects the entire atmosphere of the business district. The stranger says, "It is a live town," and publishes it abroad. It is the Sign of the Times.
